

New Parents Receive Emergency Brief in Time

As promised, the staff attorney delivered a well-reasoned, well-written brief within 48 hours.

CHALLENGE

A law firm run by a couple in Washington, D.C. urgently needed to submit a brief on behalf of a client who was facing motion to dismiss. The couple, parents to a toddler, were expecting their second baby. Because their baby was due a week after the brief, they had assumed they would have ample time to finish it. However, the baby caught them off-guard by arriving a week early. The couple rang up the President of LegalEase on a Friday afternoon to enquire if an emergency brief could be prepared within three days and in time for filing.

SOLUTION

The President of LegalEase worked hand-in-hand with our Director of Legal Services and identified the attorney who would be best suited for this project. This staff attorney was capable of working swiftly and meeting tight deadlines. While the attorney worked on the brief, the Director of Legal Services stayed in touch with the couple over the weekend, reassuring them the brief would be done ahead of time, with room for review and revisions, if required. As promised, the staff attorney delivered a well-reasoned, well-written brief by Monday morning.

RESULTS

The clients received

- An early, work-in-progress draft to give them time for input and revisions.
- A thorough brief, despite the time crunch, and in time for filing.
- Regular updates from the Director of Legal Services.
- Peace of mind and precious time to spend with their newborn.
